Convention tales:

My first International AA convention was San Diego, 1995. There were a few cops on duty, as there are for any such large event. I'm a firefighter, so I'm pretty comfortable talking to cops. I started chatting to one as I was waiting to leave after the big Saturday evening meeting.

"You know, I've worked all kinds of events in this stadium," he told me, "Football games, monster trucks, wrestle-mania, concerts, you name it. I've never been to one where there weren't at least half a dozen fights or some kind of trouble. But not here. People are shaking my hand and hugging me. I mean it's nice, but it's a little weird. And you guys are alcoholics?"

"It'd be a little different if we were still drinking," I said with a smile. "Think of it as our way of saying sorry for the crap we put you guys through, back when we were." I shook his hand and thanked him for his service. It's an attraction, not a promotion for the non-alcoholic as well.
